My parents do everything in their power to control, manipulate and restrict me. They are constantly scolding me, berating me and criticizing my every action. My parents are constantly trying to pander to my friends and colleagues (by giving money or putting pressure on them to get my employment as a government employee). My parents are never satisfied, the list of these things is huge and I could write a long essay here. I am afraid of being in such a situation a few years down the road and not being able to escape. I don't know how to get out of this. I am 16 now and I have lots of college courses lined up. I want to make sure that I will be able to leave home after college. It is clear to me that my parents are not happy with me, they just push me down. How can I make them realise that it is not fair to hold a child down? How can I get out of this situation? A: You can't. That's not to say that you are in a bad situation. What I'm saying is that there's nothing you can do. Your parents have multiple reasons for acting the way that they do. They probably view their power over you as an opportunity to set an example and teach you. If you can do a better job of parenting yourself, so be it. If not, that's ok. There's more to them than the idealized vision you have of them 3da54e8ca3
